

I removed my electronic lecture script after it became clear that making it freely available on the internet may infringe copyrights of publishers, because of inclusion of (properly referenced) figures from scientific publications; i.e., because of showing the results of works done at Universities and research institutes paid for by tax payers. I believe in the so-called “information age” such laws reflect rather poor policy and I urge governments to get rid of them for the sake of science.

Sorry about that, Thomas Reiprich
